Orphans Are Put On Auction Block, Says J. J. Davis

Secretary of Labor Bitterly Scores Present County System in Vogue All Over United States.

PRESENT PLAN MAKES CRIMINALS, HE SAYS

Stresses Value of Industrial Rehabilitation. Urges Registration of Every Alien in Country.

BY PIERRE VAN PAASSEN.
A slashing attack upon the present eleemosynary system in vogue in nearly every section of the United States and a defense of the restrictive immigration bill introduced by the Harding administration as having saved America from disaster were the chief topics of the address of Secretary of Labor James J. Davis, before a large audience, chiefly consisting of members of the local Moose organization in the city auditorium Sunday afternoon.

Secretary Davis also advocated the registration and enrollment of every alien in the United States in order to combat the pernicious "boring" by radicals which he said is now going on and which if unchecked will destroy not only the American labor movement, but will threaten the existence of the present system of constitutional government in this country.

Previous to his address in the auditorium Secretary Davis paid a visit to Stone Mountain and discussed there with officials of the Atlanta Lodge of Loyal Order of Moose plans for a site for a Moose home, which is to be erected in the neighborhood of Atlanta, according to plans adopted at the last national convention of the order.

Orphanage Conditions.
"A survey is being made by the Loyal Order of Moose at the present time which will make the people of the United States hang their heads in shame. It is a survey of conditions in the orphanages and poor houses of this great country, where conditions prevail that cannot be remedied because they are inherent of the system, which in itself operates on totally wrong principles," he said.

"I am not referring to one particular state or county. It is the same everywhere. Children are brought to these institutions and are often separated from their parents. I have been in more orphanages in the states than many other people and I have often seen cases where children were in these institutions.

STRIKELESS AGE IS ON ITS WAY, SAYS SECRETARY

Davis Decries Use of Force in Settling Disputes Between Employer and Employee.

Secretary Davis, of the labor department, expressed the hope in a Labor day message issued last night that he would "live to see that Labor day of the future when no American industry will allow any dispute between worker and employer to reach the strike stage with its misery, sorrow and despair."

"Year by year," he said, "experience is demonstrating both to labor and management, the fact that the best time to settle an industrial dispute is before it has come to the point of an appeal to force. A suspension of production in any industry today means loss to both employer and worker as well as to the public, which the industry serves, and the prosperity of the whole country which is ultimately based upon continuous production."

The department's commissioners of conciliation, he added, have been called upon in 534 strikes and industrial disputes in the last year and have adjusted or settled more than 500 of these, in addition to 87 pending at the beginning of the year.

Calls It Banner Year.
"Probably no year in our national history," the secretary declared, "has been marked by greater strides towards prosperity. We have come far during the last year in those things.

Seven Are Hurt When Street Car Hits Automobile

Mrs. F. P. Sims Seriously Injured—Street Car Men Are Arrested.

Mrs. F. P. Sims, of 434 Murphy avenue, was seriously injured, and six others, one of whom was an infant, were bruised in a collision between a street car and a sedan in Lee street at Avon avenue about 6 o'clock Sunday night.

Others hurt were Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Craig, of 22 Flora avenue, and their baby; Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Cullen, 152 North Whiteford avenue, and P. P. Sims.

Mrs. Cullen is reported to have been driving the sedan at the time of the accident. The street car was in charge of Conductor D. C. Baker and Motorman H. S. Orr.

Car Men Are Jailed.
Call Officers J. W. Mashburn, Jr., and Ed L. Arthur, who investigated the accident, arrested the street car crew under a charge of reckless driving. They were given copies of charges.

The police were told that the automobile was crossing the tracks in Lee street from the west to the east side in Avon avenue. The street car was coming toward town at the time, and it is claimed, was traveling at a high rate of speed.

Truck Hits Auto.
A collision Sunday afternoon in which an automobile, a motor truck and a street car figured resulted in Mrs. M. A. Lockridge, of 2001 Highland avenue, being slightly cut and bruised.

The accident occurred at Forrest and Piedmont avenues and was caused, according to police report, by the motor truck striking the touring car in which Mrs. Lockridge was riding. The force of the impact forced the automobile against an outboard Forrest avenue car.

Mrs. Lockridge was carried to the hospital.

INVITE LLOYD GEORGE Former Premier Will Be Asked to Visit Atlanta.

David Lloyd George, former prime minister of Great Britain, may visit Atlanta in October. The Chambers of Commerce of Atlanta and New Orleans are combining in their efforts to bring pressure to bear on "the little Welsh wizard" to have these southern cities included on his itinerary.

Secretary of Labor J. J. Davis, promised local merchants Sunday that he would do all in his power to have the man who directed the affairs of the British empire during the stormy days of the great war come to the south and see the marvelous development that has taken place here since the days of the civil war. Mr. Lloyd George is sailing during October.

DROP IN INCOME OF U. S. CRACKS TAX CUT CHANGE

Internal Revenue Collections Fall Off $576,000, 000 in Year, Says Treasury Report.

BY THOMAS L. STOKES.
Washington, September 2.—Hope for a reduction of taxes has been given another setback. The government's income from all internal revenue, including income taxes and excluding customs duties, was nearly $576,000,000 less last year than for the fiscal year 1922.

This black and white evidence, just published by the treasury, will be used by opponents of tax reduction in the next congress to withstand onslaughts made in the name of the surplus piled up last year over budget estimates.

The figures show that total collections of internal revenue from all sources was $2,621,745,227.56 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, as compared with $3,197,451,083.37 for 1922—a falling off of $575,705,855.81. Despite recent improvement in income tax collections, income and profits tax returns for 1923 were over $397,000,000 less than for 1922. Collections of miscellaneous taxes dropped nearly $178,000,000.

Cites Several Causes.
The reduction can be traced to several factors. One is the depression of business in the last half of 1921 and continuing into 1922. Receipts for 1923 include payments of the third and fourth installments of taxes on incomes for 1921, and the first and second installments on incomes for 1922. Other reductions came through changes of law which led to elimination of certain sources of revenue.

However, these are all factors which must be considered in the future. No one knows how long the present high tide of business will last, and the repeal of certain taxes is permanent, eliminating them as sources of income. The fact is that less money is coming in from internal revenue. This is the iron-bound evidence that will be used by opponents of tax reduction.

Interesting situation is being created for the next congress and the campaign both for and against reduction of taxes has already begun. Representative Madden, of Illinois, chairman of the house appropriation committee, is expressing his opposition whenever opportunity offers.

Madden bases his hope of reduction upon the surplus shown last year. Smoot admits that the government did well, but says that the surplus came largely from the customs duties of $861,000,000, which far surpassed any expectations—and that neither the large war debt still remaining nor the increased expenditures expected to be voted by the next congress warrant a reduction at this time.

In the increased expenditures he lists the bonus, which he thinks will pass, and a large public building bill, which has been widely agitated during the recess of congress. Smoot will very likely seize eagerly upon the decreased internal revenue collections as another argument.

There is another chapter in the tax story which will have its colorful pages in the next congress—the fight by progressives to increase high surtax rates, as well as to reduce the lower brackets, in an effort to "shoulder the burden of taxation on the rich."

Secretary Mellon has already announced his opposition to raising surtax rates. On the other hand he wants them reduced further. The decrease already made, he says, was a strong influence in the increase in income taxes. On this basis and because the cost of the increase in income taxes was due to back taxes and customs receipts, he is expected to oppose any lowering of income tax schedules for the coming year.

NO WORD COMES FROM U. S. FLEETS IN CHINA SEAS

Navy Department Sends Repeated Wireless Messages to Asiatic Squadrons.

Washington, September 2.—Admiral Eberle, in charge of naval operations, dispatched another message through the naval radio here Sunday afternoon to Admiral D. A. Anderson, commander of the Asiatic fleet, at Port Arthur, asking for information on the Tokio disaster and urging him to rush to the city and render any assistance he could.

No word has yet been received from Anderson, or from any other American naval units stationed in far eastern waters. The message sent by Admiral Eberle Sunday afternoon was his third, and asked for a response as did the others.

Admiral Anderson has his flag ship the U. S. S. Huron, and six destroyers with him at Port Arthur. They are the closest American vessels to the scene of the disaster, but it is estimated it would take them two days to get to Tokio.

There is also another destroyer division at Ching-Wang-Tao, China, with six vessels. At Chefoo, China, is the gunboat Asheville. The only other American vessels near the Japanese islands are the five gunboats comprising the Yangtze patrol, most of which are now up the river.

The consul of the Japanese embassy, Sadao Saburi, has had no word from Tokio since the disaster. He attempted to cable his government but was advised by the cable company that communication was interrupted. The Chinese legation has received no word.

Bodies of Victims Lie Uncounted in Streets Piled High With Litter

Death and Destruction Spread Over Area in 50-Mile Circle Around Tokio.

TOWNS DEMOLISHED OR WASHED AWAY

Fate of Ships in Harbors of Japan Unknown; New Tremors Shake Island Empire.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.
San Francisco, September 2.—Tokio, Yokohama and neighboring cities tonight were burning ruins while more than 100,000 persons in the vicinity of these cities were reported dead as a result of Saturday's earthquake, according to advices received in San Francisco by the Associated Press from its Shanghai correspondent and by the Radio Corporation from its station at Tomioka.

Death and destruction were spread over an area roughly comprised within a radius of 50 miles of Tokio. How extensive casualties and the material damage outside that zone is, has not been determined, as all communications with Japan are still interrupted except for brief connections by radio with Tomioka and commercial dispatches from Japan to Shanghai.

With railroad lines, telephone wires and all other means of communication and travel between Tokio and the outside world cut off, Tokio and the other cities on the central eastern coast on the island of Honde are isolated in their desolation.

The cities of Tokio and Yokohama were described by one Associated Press informant, the superintendent of the Japanese government wireless station at Tomioka, which operates via Radio Corporation, as "like hell."

Buildings were falling; fire was spreading everywhere; dead and dying were on all sides; there were explosions and cries of horror and fear by the panic-stricken populace.

What quake and fire did not destroy on land tidal waves were reported to have crushed or sunk at sea. The fate of the ships in Yokohama harbor and what ships were there, still remain to be determined.

The best available reports received today said hardly a structure was left standing in the Yamanote district, which includes the Tokio wards of Honjo, Fukuzawa, Akusaka, Shibuya, Nishonohashi and Kanda. Thousands are without food and water and no means of getting any at present.

Tens of thousands of guests at resorts in the Hakone district near Yokohama in the mountains were driven from their quarters by quakes and fires. They were panic stricken. The number of casualties is undetermined.

In Yokohama the fire started in the bond or foreign section, spreading rapidly to the business district, which was wiped out.

The town of Atama was demolished, six or seven thousand persons being killed.

At Ito, on the Izu peninsula, more than 500 houses were washed away by tidal waves. Six hundred persons are reported to have perished when a railway tunnel at Sasako collapsed.

The city of Nagoya is virtually destroyed. The Japanese naval station near Yokohama was engulfed by a tidal wave and the imperial palace at Tokio is endangered by fire. Nagoya has a population of 620,000. It is about 90 miles east of Asaka and about 70 miles west of Tokio.

Near earth tremors were reported today by various seismographs. The Manila observatory seismograph recorded shocks today at 8 a. m. and 10 a. m. The shocks were violent, but could not be definitely located. The Saturday shock which devastated Tokio and environs, was the greatest the Manila seismograph has recorded in 20 years, according to Father Serra, geologist in charge.

The last word from Japan was received by the Radio Corporation at 8:30 o'clock last night. That was from the Tomioka station. Additional advices from Tomioka were expected momentarily.

SHATTERED CITY LIMED IN FIRE AS PEOPLE FLEE

Strong, Hot Wind Surges Through Tokio as Quake Destroys Homes, Says Writer Refugee.

Osaka, September 2.—(By the Associated Press.)—A descriptive message from the Reuter correspondent at Tokio says that from early morning a strong wind had been blowing and the weather was cloudy and hot. At noon an appalling earthquake occurred followed by more than ten other shocks. Dwellings were either completely or partly destroyed. The people fled from their houses, jamming the streets and open spaces. Intermittent shocks continued until sundown.

Fires broke out everywhere and the flames, fanned by the strong wind, spread in all directions. It was impossible to control them, as the water supply failed at the critical moment.

When the correspondent left at 9 o'clock in the evening many of the government offices had been burned, including the home department and the Metropolitan police station.

The correspondent estimates that 200,000 houses were reduced to ashes, and the fire was still burning in many places. Estimates of the casualties for the moment are uncertain, but they are believed to have been enormous.

Troops and doctors were doing splendid work in rendering first aid. Many workmen were killed or injured in the government printing offices. Six hundred persons were killed at the Itohiki electric plant.

Amid the flames of the burning city the citizens of Tokio were seeking places of safety.

Bulletins Laden With Tragedy Seep Out to World Aghast at Catastrophe.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.
Shanghai, China, September 2.—One hundred thousand persons have perished in Tokio and Yokohama alone, according to bulletins received here from Japan.

In Tokio the arsenal exploded, destroying the arsenal and the adjoining printing bureau. There were several thousand casualties here.

Most serious damage was done to the tract covering the Yama-No-Te district.

In the Nishonohashi and Kanda wards, in which scarcely a single structure is left standing, thousands lack water and food.

The Kaifu building in the Marunouchi district collapsed, with a thousand casualties.

The lofty buildings lining the streets opposite the Central railway station were burned. The main building of the Central railroad station remains intact.

At Yokohama the fire started in the Rand and spread through Renten and Isaki streets, wiping out the business district.

Tens of thousands of visitors, many of them foreigners, are in the mountain resorts of the Hakone district. They were panic stricken by the repeated quakes. Mount Hakone and the town of Atama were demolished, with the loss of six or seven thousand dead.

At Ito, on the Izu peninsula, more than 500 houses were washed away by tidal waves.

Six hundred persons perished with the railway tunnel at Sasako, the largest in Japan, collapsed.

Osaka, Japan, September 2.—There have been 10,000 casualties in Yokohama from the earthquake and fire, according to a wireless dispatch to the governors of Osaka and Kobe from the governor of Yokohama, who is on board the steamer Korea Maru in Yokohama harbor.

"A devastating earthquake and fire have occurred in Yokohama. There have been 10,000 casualties. All means of communication severed. We need food; there is no water. Dispatch relief immediately."

At Atami alone 600 persons were killed.

All communication with Tokio is interrupted, but indirect reports indicate that a great typhoon broke over Tokio Saturday morning, subsiding at noon.

The typhoon was followed by terrific earth shocks and conflagrations which threw the city into chaos and struck terror into the hearts of the inhabitants. Yokohama was still reported burning at 8:30 o'clock yesterday evening, when virtually every building had been destroyed.

Tidal waves washed away many houses in the vicinity of the harbor. A number of small towns at the foot of Mount Fuji are reported to have been completely demolished. Hundreds of lives were lost.

were lacking, the message added, as all communications were severed immediately after the bombardment.

TENSE SITUATION HOLDS TAUT DURING DAY.

London, September 2.—(By The Associated Press.)—The lapse of another day finds no diminution in the tension or gravity of the Greco-Italian dispute. No further overt or hostile act is recorded, but a grave aspect of the situation is the Italian determination, expressed beforehand, to refuse to recognize the status of the league of nations in the affair or respect its decision.

The leading English writers have found consolation, in commenting on the dispute, in the fact that in 1914 no international tribunal such as the league of nations, or council of ambassadors, existed to which the Austro-Serbian dispute might have been submitted with some hope of avoiding war. This hope, they say, he shattered if Italy refuses to recognize the league.

Both Greek and Italian governments are energetically occupying themselves in placing their respective cases before the world. The Italian press does not hesitate to impute "criminal motives" to Greece. The Greek government, on its side, is eagerly offering to submit the question of responsibility for the Janina murders to an international tribunal and abide by any decision and pay the compensation such tribunal decides.

Italy contends that the Greek government has not been recognized by the powers and lacks the status or right of appeal to the league, which ought to repudiate its application, while Greece argues that it will secure recognition through assassination.

Meanwhile, the council of the league, which is convening in the house, is proceeding leisurely and has adjourned until Tuesday, and even then still further may adjourn the case.

Diplomats Preserve Silence.

Another disquieting feature of the affair is a report from Rome of anti-Italian demonstrations in the type of Crete, which, it is feared, may be the prelude to descent upon that island, like Corfu.

International statesmen are preserving a discreet silence on the subject. M. Poincare, of France, made his customary Sunday speeches, but carefully avoided reference to foreign politics. Lord Curzon returned to London tonight, brought back prematurely through the threatening international situation. He also declined to say anything about the dispute until he had time to study all official reports. He permitted himself the significant comment, however, that the league of nations had taken the matter in hand and that seems to be the inevitable and preliminary step. "Everybody's efforts," he said, "should be devoted to strengthening the league's hand."

It is not known yet whether Premier Baldwin will have his return from Aix-les-Bains on account of the crisis.

GREEKS TO STAND PAT PENDING LEAGUE RULING.

Athens, September 2.—(By the Associated Press.)—Complete order prevails in Athens, although the Greeks are profoundly depressed over the incidents at Corfu. All places of amusement have been closed since Friday as a sign of mourning for the victims of the Italian bombardment.

Acting upon a protest from Signor Montagna, the Italian minister, the Greek government suspended for one day the newspaper Eleftheros Typos for characterizing the Italians as "the fugitives of Caporetto," and has dismissed the censor for allowing the statement to pass.

Telegraphic communication with Corfu has not been restored, but dispatches received by indirect routes indicate that the Italians are acting as if in a state of war with Greece; for instance, they have cut the Corfu canal to Greek navigation, have held up a Greek steamer at Brindisi and fired upon another.

Athens is United.

Premier Gonatas has reiterated the government's intention to await the decision of the league of nations and of refraining from hostile acts towards Italy. All Italian vessels in Greek ports are allowed full liberty of movement.

Internal dissensions have existed here since 1914, but today for the first time the entire press stands in complete accord on the subject of the Italian coup. The Politiki says: "By the bombardment of Corfu Italy ignored the league of nations, of which she is a member. Italian shells were fired against miserably stricken human beings rescued from Turkish massacre by Americans. This action indicates a complete absence of morality and craves Italy's sentence from an international agreement."

Other newspaper publish editorials in a similar vein.

Fearing anti-Italian demonstrations, the government has placed a guard of thirty men around the Italian legation.

Closes Straits of Otranto.

The Metropolitan of Athens has addressed a protest against the occupation of Corfu to the Archbishop of Canterbury and the league of nations. The Hellenic league of nations society has also dispatched a protest to the league of nations secretariat at Geneva and to the union of sister societies of the league in Paris, London, Brussels and New York.

A requiem will be celebrated in the cathedral tomorrow for the victims of the bombardment. The natives of Corfu resident in Athens held an indignation meeting this afternoon.

Japanese Disaster Is Seen As Sign World's Near End

The terrific earthquake and tidal wave in Japan with its tremendous loss of life and property are proof of the unerring accuracy and fulfillment of Bible prophecy, according to Elder Booth of the Church of Seventh Day Adventists.

"Consider throughout the world point to the end of time and the second coming of Christ," he said in his sermon Sunday night.

Asked by his disciples: "What shall be the sign of Thy coming and of the end of the world?" Jesus answered, "Ye shall hear wars and rumors of wars."

"For nation shall rise against nation and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be famines and pestilences and earthquakes in divers places. For all these things shall come upon the earth."

"And then shall be signs in the sun and in the moon and in the stars and upon the earth, distress of nations with perplexity; the sea and waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory."

It is Armageddon that is coming "The battle of the Lord," say the Seventh Day Adventists. "The nations are in turmoil. Men are blaspheming God. Those who direct the destinies of 180 million of people are publicly burning effigies of God the Father, Moses and Jesus in the streets of Moscow and Petrograd."

"A tidal wave and earthquake sweeps Japan and the dimensions of the catastrophe are such as were not witnessed on the face of the earth since the ten plagues descended on the Egyptians way back in the dim recesses of antiquity."

"These great disasters which have visited mankind during the last few years with ever-increasing frequency are pointed to by the Seventh Day Adventists as proof of the Biblical prophecies of the second coming of Christ is near at hand."

"When we see these things, when men shall be perplexed and their hearts shall tremble with fear, when there is distress amongst the people of the earth and . . . wars and rumors of wars . . . pestilence and famine . . . signs in the heavens above and the earth beneath, then shall the end be nigh," so spoke Jesus twenty centuries ago.

CURBY BADLY INJURED

Does Not Know Name of His Assault.

Mark Curby, 316 Bellwood avenue, was carried to Grady hospital about 11 o'clock Sunday night with an ugly gash over his right eye which was inflicted, he told Officers Smith and Brown, by men he did not know.

According to his statement, Curby was walking along Bellwood avenue at Chestnut street when he was accosted by several men, none of whom he recognized. The men engaged him in a quarrel and one slapped his face. When he sought to defend himself one of the party struck him a severe blow across the eye, he said.

Officers are investigating.

PIEDMONT CIRCUIT HAS HEAVY DOCKET

This term of court will be the first held here since the new circuit was formed by the last session of the house of representatives.

HOSTS OF LABOR TO MARCH TODAY

Today is Labor day—the day set aside each year as a national holiday to be observed as a tribute to labor.

Atlanta's preparations were completed Saturday and details of the day's activities announced through the press, indicating plans heretofore unequalled in holiday preparations in the south.

The entire city will join in the holiday having been proclaimed by Mayor Sims and practically every business activity observing either the day or a half holiday.

Wherever members of organized labor are employed business will join hands with labor in making the event the successful day it has always been in this city.

The postoffice will celebrate the holiday. After one delivery in the residence section and two in the business sections, all departments will close at 12 o'clock.

Courts to Be Closed.

And the courts will not even open. Monday would be the first day of the September term, for the superior courts, and the first day of the fall term, for the city and municipal courts. All other departments of the county government, save those that have to be on the job every day, will stay closed.

The city hall will be closed in the afternoon.

Automobile, accessory, battery and tire dealers will close up, with exceptions, at noon, though some of them will not open at all Monday.

The gasoline stations, however, will remain open, as will all soda fountains.

Few holidays are observed with more enthusiasm or offer greater limits of the festival spirit than the annual Labor day plans in Atlanta. Far-reaching field day events, pyrotechnic displays in Lakewood park in the afternoon and at night and scores of other interesting events are included regularly on the program, and plans for today's celebration overshadow preparations in any previous year.

Dozens of committees have worked for many weeks on the program for today's celebration, and no feature of wholesome entertainment has been overlooked.

Beginning at 10:30 in the morning, with parade will get under way, with William Strauss riding as marshal, in a procession, and will proceed as indicated.

POLITICAL RALLIES SCHEDULED TONIGHT

A number of political rallies scheduled for tonight and Tuesday night by candidates for offices to be filled in the city primary Wednesday and renewed activity on the part of advocates of the proposed $2,000,000 issue for park bonds, marks the beginning of the last lap of the campaign.

As the date of the primary draws close at hand, park bond advocates are confident of success. Levi Reeves, manager for the park bond campaign, states that "workers in every ward are enthusiastic over the prospect of passage of the bonds and report wonderful increase in interest."

Polling places for the primary and for the bond election, both to be held Wednesday, have been announced and candidates and bond advocates are busy organizing their friends for active work around the ballot boxes all day Wednesday.

No withdrawals had been announced up to Saturday night and indications were that all candidates who had originally entered the lists would stick to the finish.

That candidates are not going to "let up" in last minute work is indicated in the announcement of meetings for Monday and Tuesday nights.

Voters of the third ward have been invited to attend a central rally in the interest of Fred C. Woodall, candidate for reelection to council from the third ward, at Hill Street school Monday night at 8 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Morgan will entertain the crowd with a watermelon cutting and speeches will be made by Mayor Walter A. Sims, Chief of Construction W. A. Hensell and County Commissioner Edwin Johnson. Paul Etheridge and Virlyn Moore.

Dr. Carl C. Aven will address the voters at 7:30 o'clock on Tuesday night at the residence of Dr. J. E. Davis, 324 Capitol avenue. Tuesday night the final rally for Dr. Aven's friends and supporters will be held at the residence of J. R. Carroll, 322 South Boulevard.

Walls should be built on the principle of a vacuum bottle and thus keep the rooms cool in summer and save heat in winter, says an inventor.

Old newspapers for wrapping purposes sent from the United States to Hongkong each year have a total weight of from 4,000 to 7,000 tons.

Airplane passenger fare from Helsingfors, Finland, to Reval, Estonia, is equal to $9.92 in American money, and the round trip to $17.87.

A Poet's Vision on Labor Day

TODAY is Labor Day. The nation pauses to do honor to the 42,000,000 wage-earners of the country. For the majority, it is a day of speeches and observance. But for the poet it is something more—a day for looking beyond the walls and beyond the hills and beholding a vision of work and all its meanings. Edwin Markham is known to all the world as the poet who wrote "The Man With the Hoe." He is more; he has worked with his hands. He has worked on the farm, at the blacksmith's forge. And today he is one of the most distinguished literary men of America. He is honorary president of the Poetry Society of America, and a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters. But he remembers the meaning of work as he learned it in his early days. No man is better fitted to write the poem of this day. "The Carriers of the Load" was composed especially for The Constitution and the North American Newspaper Alliance.

The Carriers of the Load

LABOR DAY, 1923

BY EDWIN MARKHAM

(Copyright, 1923, in U. S. and Great Britain, by North American Newspaper Alliance. All Rights Reserved.)

I, wreathed with riches, crowned with culture, sat
By my great window opening to the stars,
The smoke-rings circling upward as I mused,
The vast rooms glowing with their marbles, filled
With treasures from a hundred lands. Outside
My purring motor stood, my racing yacht
Chafed at the pier. All things were mine—
All mine at last, and life smacked very sweet;
For I had won them with my own strong powers!

Then flashed on me a visionary host,
The stooped and silent toilers of the world.
I saw the dust-dust miners, candle in cap,
Gauging the coal from caverns underground—
Thousands of men imprisoned under the earth,
As the condemned for crimes incredible.
In the gray dawn, under the fading stars,
I saw bent plowmen, with their smoking teams,
Turning the deep dark furrows to the light—
Saw harvesters, in long hot afternoons,
Reaping the grain and piling fragrant hay
In golden heaps. On far Atlantic shores,
I saw the white sails of the fishing boats,
Groping their way from rivers to the sea.
I saw the liners on the ocean rim
Trailing their bannered smoke upon the wind;
While buried deep in the steaming hold of the ship
The reeking stokers, red in the furnace glare,

Heaved all day long their endless tons of coal.
On Texan plains I saw the cowboys ride
In clouds of dust behind the bellowing herds.
I saw the trains sing over the narrowing rails
With sleepless watchers at the throttle-bar.
Far in the northwest suddenly I heard
The axes ringing out of Oregon,
Answered by axes in Wisconsin woods,
In chorus with the lumber mills of Maine.
Then I saw builders heaving heavy beams,
Lifting the rafters, driving home the nails,
Erecting mansions never to be their homes.
Far in the South, among the foam-white fields,
I saw the cotton pickers, stooped in the sun
And moving wearily. Then they faded out
And mills of cotton-weavers glided in,
Mills choked with the flying lint and murky air,
Where haggard children toiled among the frames.
And then I saw pale workmen, row on row,
Bent in the sweat-shops in the eternal roar
Of wheels and flying needles. Mothers were there,
Crushed with grim burdens that unwomaned them,
With children who are aged even in youth.

These visions rose and faded; then a voice
Cried into my heart: "Man of white-handed ease,
You have beheld your hard-pressed brothers, seen
The conscripts who are carrying your load."

Rome Chamber

Will Advertise Saltpeter Cave

BY THOMAS J. BRYSON.

Constitution Bureau.
Masonic Temple Annex.
Rome, Ga., September 2.—(Special.)—Rome is preparing to tell the world the story of Saltpeter cave, a natural cavern some 24 miles from the city, which takes rank alongside Mammoth cave both in size and in weird grandeur.

There can be no question, Romans believe, but that Saltpeter cave will become as famous as is Stone Mountain once its story is told. Its nature will justify such fame, they hold.

It will be ranked as one of the real natural wonders of the southeast, if not of the entire country, they feel, and this will be only natural when the nature of the cavern is considered.

The cave is to have a prominent place in a booklet soon to be issued by the local chamber of commerce. It will be designated as a place worthy of any traveler's attention and a road map of now it is to be reached will be featured.

Saltpeter cave is located only two miles from Kingston, some 60 miles from Atlanta and almost the same distance from Chattanooga by the Western & Atlantic railroad. It is less than 25 miles from Rome and yet not one person in ten in this city knows of its existence.

The main entrance to the cave is about 100 feet below the summit of a dolomite ridge, and after descending some 20 feet or more a broad, high tunnel stretches straight into the hill for almost 400 feet. To the north is a large chamber, called the "ballroom." This is approximately 20 by 50 feet square, with its ceiling more than 50 feet above the floor.

From the "ballroom" a low narrow passage leads to the "bat room," which is 90 feet below the level of the entrance. The "bat room" is almost 200 feet square and is as large as the "ballroom."

Winding passages leading to other large chambers branch from the main tunnel at frequent intervals. The main passage itself leads on until an underground river is reached. This is a sizeable stream which only a few hardy explorers have ever crossed. This crossing was made years ago by a venturesome party that built a bridge of two large logs on which they crossed. The logs have long since rotted away and nowadays the few visitors the cave has content themselves with making the short round which does not go beyond the river, a turn to the south and follows the circuitous route of winding tunnels for some a mile and a half to the "pig room" and thence back to daylight, coming out at a small entrance close by the larger one by which the entrance was made.

The interior of the cave is very dry except in one or two places where clear cold water trickles from out a crevice and goes to join the underground river.

The floors of the different chambers are some of sand and some of clay. In some places, the walls glisten with quartz crystals, others are darkened, apparently by smoke from pine torches of visitors of other days; while still others, show layers of different colored rocks, proving that the cavern is one of the earliest formations.

Legend has it that the Indians used to bring from the cave almost limitless quantities of silver. Certain it is that Indians of this section were supplied with this metal. Whether it was obtained from the cave is still a moot question, since no thorough exploration of the cavern in its entirety has ever been undertaken.

Armed with candles, they explored the hole.

The passage that opened up ahead of them sloped rapidly and they came after a time to a large room, the walls of which had what seemed to be arrow marks pointing to another low passage. Into this passage they pushed on hands and knees, barely able to squeeze between the narrow walls. They came shortly to a second chamber across the further end of which they found a strongly-built wall.

Shortening candles warned them of the need for haste and they retraced their steps. They never again visited that portion of the cave.

Comparatively little credence is placed locally in the legends in which the cave is rich. Romans believe the cave is rich in treasure, but not of the sort the Indians were seeking. It is full, however, they feel of "thrills" to be found in few other places—especially in this section of the country. The cave, they think, is decidedly an asset to Georgia and the entire southeast. It is easily accessible by excellent auto roads. It should be a Mecca for every auto traveler between Chattanooga and Atlanta, Romans point out.

And it is with the idea of making it just that, that the story of Saltpeter cave will be told in Rome's new booklet that deals with not only Rome, but northwest Georgia generally.

Reign of Satan Now Nearing End, Says Hildebrandt

Addressing a large audience at the Rialto theater Sunday afternoon upon invitation of Atlanta Bible students, Professor Louis D. Hildebrandt, Scriptural lecturer, declared that the world is approaching the great conflict spoken of in the Bible by prophets and which indicates the end of time, and predicted the beginning of a war in 1925 which "will awaken the people to the fact that the Lord is here" and that the "kingdom of heaven is at hand."

Dr. Hildebrandt spoke to a large and enthusiastic audience and cited many Biblical quotations in support of his prediction that the "end of Satan's reign is at hand and the beginning of Christ's reign on earth is here."

The speaker said in part: "The tangible evidence indicates that the great conflict will be within the next two or three years, and of short duration. The Scriptures indicate that the trouble will reach its climax in 1925 and quickly burn itself out. The prophets then indicate that those who have faith will cry out the Lord and He will bring them out of the trouble and into their desired habitation of rest. (Is. cvii:25-30)."

"This great conflict will awaken the people to the fact that the Lord is here; that the kingdom of heaven has been established, for which he taught His followers to pray. They shall follow times of restoration. (Acts iii:19-24). Jesus states that for the elect's sake many will come through the time of trouble, and these shall be the first ones that will have the opportunity of life. The day of deliverance is at hand. The Lord is present and will bring order out of chaos, and grant life, liberty and happiness to those who love and obey His righteousness."

"According to the Bible chronology, Gentile times began in 606 B. C., were to endure 2,520 years and ended August 1, 1914. During that period Satan has been the god of this world or order of society. The end of the world marks the beginning of the exercise of Kingly authority by the Lord Jesus, the king of kings. Everyone must bear witness that things began to happen in 1914.

"In their desperation, the powers, the ruling factors, are plunging madly into the great conflict in the hopes of saving the present evil order of society. Had the business men refrained from exploiting the people, had big politicians faithfully represented them, had the ministers of the denominational churches faithfully preached the message of truth, had all of these refrained from deceit and hypocrisy, this great conflict would have been avoided.

"The present order of things cannot survive the conflict for which the nations are preparing, and to which they are rapidly rushing, because of the terrible instruments of destruction."

"Let's Tune in On God's Message," Urges Evangelist

Speaking on "Foretastes of Eternity," Evangelist F. F. Bosworth, of Chicago, opened the third week of the revival services at the Gospel Tabernacle on Capitol avenue, near Fair street Sunday night, and an audience that occupied every chair and all standing room, heard his sermon.

Beginning tonight at 7:30 o'clock—the hour of the meetings having been changed from 7:45—the evangelist will deliver his fifth sermon on phases of divine healing. His announced subject is "What Is the Faith That Brings Bodily Healings?"

Preceding his sermon, Rev. R. A. Forrest, acting pastor of the Tabernacle, said a move would be made to a larger building as quickly as possible, so that everybody in Atlanta who desired to attend the meetings could do so. He said, however, that until the move was made, services would continue nightly at 7:30 o'clock, except Saturday. He also announced a special meeting Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock when Evangelist Bosworth will pray for the sick. A number testified at the Sunday night meeting to having been cured of disease, while the evangelist prayed for many more at the close of the sermon.

In his sermon, the evangelist said: "We who are saved receive the foretastes, little glimpses of the glory and blessing which are to come, sinners, likewise receive their tokens, foretastes of the wrath that is to come later."

He likened God's messages to the unseen messages broadcast by radio station. "Radio messages are passing through this town, and we are receiving them, but we are not hearing them with our natural ear, but if we have receiving instruments and tune in, we can."

"So let us tune in on God's message and tune out the devil. We will be continually blessed if we do," he said. One of the pleasing features of the meeting, was a solo by Rev. Forrest, "My Soul Bless Thee, Jehovah," accompanied on the organ and trombone by the Bosworth brothers, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Bosworth, sang a duet, "The Crown of Thorns."

RED CROSS RUSHES AID TO ISLANDS FROM TWO PLACES

Washington, September 2.—The machinery of the American Red Cross was set in motion today to speed aid to the stricken millions in the section of Japan devastated by Saturday's earthquake.

Instructions have been cabled to the society's central committees in the Philippines and China, its strongest chapters in the Orient, to inform headquarters here immediately as to the number of Red Cross nurses and the amount of relief supplies available for quick dispatch to the zone of disaster. Red Cross officials said relief parties would be rushed to Japan by destroyer and any other fast ships obtainable.

Appropriation of funds to finance the relief will be made, it was declared as soon as the needs are determined. National headquarters tonight was awaiting a reply to its message to the Japanese government last night asking what assistance was required.

Officials pointed out that whatever the United States could give the Japanese now, aside from its humanitarian aspect, would be in the nature of an act of gratitude, recalling that at the time of the San Francisco earthquake the Japanese Red Cross immediately sent $100,000 for relief.

Swallows Poison

And Then Refuses To Go To Hospital

Mrs. F. E. Brown, of 54 McDaniel street, who Sunday afternoon swallowed 4 poison tablets in an effort to end her own life, according to information given the Grady hospital ambulance surgeon, refused to be taken to the hospital for treatment.

"What did you take?" she was asked by the doctor. "That is my business, and you have nothing to do with it," she replied stolidly, adding that she would not, under any consideration, permit them to remove her to the hospital.

Right here is where many a treatment purporting to cure hay fever has failed. The treatment happens to coincide with the rain it seems to act miraculously.

The 1 per centum of the population who are allergic to the pollen of the hay fever should put in a few minutes a day at least trying for a week. September, the weather the better. Dr. J. C. McGehee, of Chicago, has learned, from his studies of hay fever, denotes the usual dryness of the pollen—one is sure to find relief. Many sufferers in the big cities and remaining there, or small towns find relief by visiting the country. The pollen-provided they were responsible for the pollen in the air, vacant lot just around the corner. Whether one will experience relief from a particular resort depends entirely on the freedom of the air there for the particular kind of pollen responsible for the trouble in the individual. Physicians now determine the incriminating pollen which was responsible in a given case.

Confidence in Fall Trade Causes Market Improvements

New York, September 2.—(By the Associated Press).—More confidence over fall trade prospects reflected by a quiet forward movement in stocks and improved sentiment all around the market. The market was buoyed by the fact that the steel industries good authorities point out that activity may not increase a good deal in September. They base their assertion on the fact that there was very little slump during the summer and therefore many of the present rate of operations would not be an unfavorable sign. The steel market undoubtedly is in a much stronger position at this time than a majority of observers a few months ago thought would be possible. And whether there is a sound basis for it or not, sentiment is noticeably cheerful. The pig iron market is also showing a better tone, price recessions dropped.

Western Farmers Cheerful.
Another reason for confidence in fall business is the growing belief that the worst has been passed on farms. Western farmers are said to be in a more cheerful mood with a good yield of corn to offset losses in wheat and with the live stock industry claiming their attention. The grain markets, too, have taken on a better tone and wheat prices are several cents above the recent low.

The government cotton condition report confirms the belief that the boll weevil and drought in the southwest will greatly reduce the cotton yield. While this will mean less revenue for many planters, it will at the same time mean higher prices for the others. The announcement was made on Friday of the department of agriculture's estimate of a sharp drop in condition of the crop with an indicated yield of 10,788,000 bales, as against an estimate of 11,516,000.

Signs meanwhile are increase that trade is breaking away from the summer lull. Conservation is still the rule according to the weekly mercantile reviews, but more interest in forward requirements is being manifested. The summer slump was not as great as some feared it would be. Employment has fallen off somewhat and this is construed in many quarters as indicating less likelihood of further inflation of labor costs and

New Orleans Cotton Market Shows Substantial Gains

New Orleans, Louisiana, September 2.—There was a gradual rise in the early sessions last week in the cotton market and a rapid rise on the closing session when the August report on the crop by the government caused a bulge of $5 a bale. Lowest prices of the week were made on the opening session while the highest prices were made on the closing months were 15 to 21 points higher than the opening session. The week while at the highest they were 120 to 125 points over. Prices moved to within a range of 135 to 147 points at 24.77. In the spot market, middling gained 50 points in the net results, closing at 24.75 cents a pound against 21.75 on the close of this week last year.

During practically the whole week the market was dominated by end of August reports on the crop, during the earlier sessions by forecasts of the government figures on condition and on the closing session, which was Friday, by the official report itself. According to the department of agriculture the condition of the crop on August 25 was 54.1 per cent of normal, indicating a yield of 10,788,000 bales. Rains in Texas and Oklahoma, breaking the long drought over the cotton areas of those two states, were regarded as the most important weather events of the week but they came too late to affect the figures of the end of the August period.

Two much rain was complained of in the eastern belt, where in many sections increased insect damage was noted.

It is generally considered that this coming week it must remain much of a weather market, with special reference to condition over Texas, but at the same time the trade will be forced into consideration of the progress of ginning because the first ginning period of the season ended with the close of August and the census bureau will issue its figures on it at the end of this coming week. Price estimates of the output of Texas gins run high, because the drought of the earlier part of August caused much forced maturity of plants and premature opening of bolls. It is likely that private forecasts of ginning will have much to do with the week's fluctuations in prices.

FARM EXPERT SOUGHT BY BROOKS COUNTY

Quitman, Ga., September 2.—(Special).—Much interest is manifested in the meeting of the Brooks board of county commissioners next Wednesday, when a delegation of business men and farmers will appear before the board to urge the appropriation of a fund sufficient to pay the salary and expenses of a county farm agent. This delegation will go before the board under authority of a resolution which was practically unanimously passed at a joint meeting of citizens held last week at the country club, when a number of out of town crop experts addressed the meeting on the advisability of diversification of crops, since it is apparent cotton can no longer be produced as the one-crop of the country, on account of the uncertainty of the weather.

It is not known what position the county board will take in regard to the matter, but it is believed the sentiment is in favor of the action of the county that some change must be made in general farming conditions, that the board will do what it can to secure the services of the best available farm expert.

Smith Club for Quitman.

Quitman, Ga., September 2.—(Special).—As a result of the services conducted in Quitman by the Gypsy Smith Evangelistic club of Savannah, a similar organization will be formed here. A committee has been appointed which will report at a meeting to be held tomorrow afternoon. A tentative constitution and by-laws will be proposed and permanent organization effected. More than twenty prominent church workers have signed the membership roll and much interest is being taken in the proposed organization.

Rotarians Enter Contests.

The entire party will go through the country in automobiles, returning the same day.

BABY'S WELFARE

By Dr. Arthur G. Bretz

FOREWORD. Reports from all parts of the country show that thousands of babies die from diseases which are preventable. Therefore, we feel that an extra effort should be put forth to bring before the readers of this paper important information pertaining to the prevention of common diseases and the spreading of disease.

Articles appearing in this column are intended especially for those mothers who are so busy with daily household routine that they have not the time to read the many good books published, or attend lectures on such subjects. No attempt will be made to prescribe medical or surgical treatment, nor to make a diagnosis of any illness.

The articles appearing in this column have been prepared by a licensed, graduate physician having many years of experience in dealing with the health and growth of the child.

Hot Weather Brings Problems.

Summer weather brings with it many problems having to do with the care and feeding of infants. Each summer hundreds of infants die because of lack of knowledge on the part of the mother. There is no reason why infants should not survive the hot weather, providing the mother understands and puts into practice the principles of care and feeding which every mother should know. Every family physician knows that probably the one great outstanding problem in warm weather is that of feeding. It is not too much to think that too much thought cannot be given to it.

Infestations occurring in the summer, with the large infant mortality rate, offer one of the largest fields for an active life-saving campaign. It is the duty of every mother to begin at once by taking such precautions as will prevent these most dreaded diseases. If every mother would study this problem and take advantage of all that is to be learned, the mortality rate of infants during the summer months would be materially reduced.

Those mothers who have nature's food for their infants are indeed fortunate, for there is no better food than breast milk. Unfortunately, however, many mothers are inclined to be careless in choosing their diet, with the result that baby's digestion is upset and serious bowel trouble may follow. It is as important for nursing mothers to exercise the greatest care in eating proper foods and to observe all the rules for cleanliness as it is important for those mothers who feed their babies from the bottle to select safe food that will properly nourish and strengthen their children.

Any attacks of vomiting or diarrhea, or even green undigested bowel movements, occurring in the infant under eighteen months of age (during hot weather) are to be regarded as serious matters and require immediate attention. These signs are frequently forerunners of dangerous intestinal disorders, and a physician should be consulted at once.

In the case of bottle-fed babies, the greatest danger lies in an unclean milk supply, and in careless methods of preparing the feedings. Not only is it vitally essential that the milk be clean, but it is equally essential that it be kept clean. All utensils, bottles, spoons, and even green undigested bowel movements, occurring in the infant under eighteen months of age (during hot weather) are to be regarded as serious matters and require immediate attention. These signs are frequently forerunners of dangerous intestinal disorders, and a physician should be consulted at once.

During hot weather it is not advisable to change the infant's food unless such a change is absolutely necessary or advised by a physician. During the extreme heat of the day it is safer to give a little less food than the baby usually takes in cooler weather. Few babies are underfed. The chief danger lies in overfeeding. In preparing the food, care should be taken that the proper quantities are used. When condensed milk is used, it is better to pour the milk from the can to the spoon, allowing the milk to level itself. This will insure more accurate measurements.

Very often fresh milk is hard to obtain. In such cases condensed milk is a safe food for infant feeding. The National Relief Commission used condensed milk extensively in France and Belgium during the late war, and obtained wonderful results. CHAPTER LXVII.
"I'll shoot!"

For a moment Gloria was too much surprised to move. She stood there, staring straight ahead of her. For Valerie was standing in the doorway, with the baby in one arm and with the other hand pointing a revolver at her.

"Valerie!" she exclaimed. "What on earth—"

"Don't come any nearer!" Valerie cried, but Gloria realized that her voice was trembling and that the hand holding the revolver shook. "I'll shoot!"

"Valerie—I didn't come to do you any harm!" Gloria protested. "Truly I didn't—I just want to help you. If you'll just listen to me a minute—just put down that revolver and listen to me, and you'll see that I'm telling you the truth. Please, Valerie."

Valerie hesitated a moment, then her arm dropped to her side, as if without any will of her own directing it.

"All right," she said, weakly, leaning against the door sill. "What is it?"

Gloria ran up the few remaining steps and took the baby from her. Then she drew her to a rickety old couch that stood against the wall.

"LARRY's downstairs—you know that he was, didn't you?" she asked, and Valerie nodded. "Well, he brought me all the way up here—we came to persuade you to let us take the baby back to his father. Oh Valerie, don't you see that that's the only thing to do? You're sure to be caught, and then just think of what it means—prison!"

Valerie winced as if someone had struck her in the face.

"There isn't anyone here with you, is there?" Gloria went on.

"No—I'm alone," she said, speaking slowly, as if she felt very tired. "I came by myself—I was sure that it was a slow flush staining her face and neck as she did so.

"Gloria wants me to give up the baby," she told him, as if he had not already known that fact. "But—oh, I don't see why I should!" she exclaimed defiantly. "I have my plans all made. I can get away from here so simply, and nobody'll be able to find me—I can remain hidden until the reward is paid, and then I'll plan to come back and get the child from me and return it to his father, and I'll just go on. I suppose I ought not to tell you these things, but you won't turn me away, will you? Oh, if you only knew how terribly I need the money—how much it means to someone else for me to get this—"

It was clear that she was much upset. Her usual reserve had slipped from her like an old cloak, and she talked as if she had kept everything to herself so long that it was a relief now to tell what was on her mind, even though the knowledge might be used to her disadvantage.

"But you can't get it this way, Mrs. Eaton," Larry insisted. "All you're going to get this way is a jail sentence. Kidnaping is a serious crime."

"But a baby's mother has the right to surely she has the right to her child!" protested Valerie. Her eyes fell, however, before Larry's keen glance.

"You know that all this child's mother wanted him for was as a means of getting more money out of his father," Larry declared. "Come on—play fair. She got you to do this because it meant making Phillip Brewer give her money that she had no right to. She's already trimmed him. She has no more right to this baby than you have!" She gave him a long ago—said time after time that she didn't care a whoop about him. She even signed papers relinquishing all right to him. It's too late now for her to talk of mother love!"

"Well, I—" Valerie was silent for a time, and Gloria hoped that she was trying to reach would be the only wise one for her to make.

JACOBAN WAS FIRST OF THE FURNITURE PERIODS

Originated in the Days of King James of England.

By MARIAN MOORE

A complete mastery of the subject of "Period Furniture" would require almost a lifetime of earnest study, which is out of the question for all except a few fortunate mortals. The vast majority of our population would like just enough knowledge of period furniture to distinguish the various periods, with a bit of information as to why certain names were applied, acquiring that knowledge in the most painless manner. In behalf of that vast majority, we are going to name a few characteristics by which various periods may be identified, doing it with the fewest possible statistics, so the least brain work is required.

The Jacobean period, which is the first recognized period furniture, did not originate with a furniture designer named Jacob, as one would meaningfully but uninformed woman described it. It was named for James I, whose name in the Latin form was "Jacobus," but the Jacobean period includes the regime of Charles I, as well, and also of Cromwell and Charles II, after Charles I was beheaded by his unloving subjects. This period corresponds to the time the American colonies were being settled.

Characteristics of Jacobean.
The general characteristics of Jacobean furniture are its large, rectangular forms, extensively carved with scrolls and twists, the feet of the chairs and tables being shaped to merit the descriptive names of bun foot, pear foot, and scroll foot. The finer specimens of the furniture of this period are endowed with a dignity and grandeur unsurpassed by any other period.

One of the principle woods of that time, with the carving in bold relief. The legs of the tables were "baluster," or knob-turned, "flamish scroll" (S-curve) and "Spiral Twist," with bulbous or melon-shaped legs on the larger tables. Thick stretchers on chairs and tables are characteristic, and another feature by which the period may be identified are the carved legs in geometrical forms on cabinets.

Cane and Upholstery Appear.
During the reign of Cromwell the backs of the chairs were of solid wood, extensively carved, but under the reign of Charles II, they were decorated with cane and upholstered to match the seat. Arched scroll stretchers between the front legs and at the crest of chair backs are also details which appeared during the reign of Charles II, as well as the twisted leg by which much non-descript furniture of today is mistaken for Jacobean.

The scroll work is its most noted characteristic, "S" and "C" scrolls, interlaced and repeated, grapevine scrolls and interlacing circles being the principal ornate motifs. Even the termination of the arms of the chairs is frequently a scroll, in the true period furniture, with the up-

She must be desperate indeed to hesitate so long.

But when Valerie spoke again it was with the determination that she had shown earlier.

"I know that you two think I'm absolutely mad," she said. "But I've started to do it. I won't give up the baby now!"

BAINBRIDGE BUSINESS OUTLOOK IS FAVORABLE

Bainbridge, September 2.—(Special.)—Fall business is opening up with favorable prospects for Bainbridge merchants. Additions are being made to some of the stores for the convenience of bigger business. The W. J. Brady store is taking in more space for the accommodation of the biggest stock it has ever handled. A big peach factory will be ready for business in a few days and with new automobiles and new coming in addition to the large number already here, a good business for this section is forecast. Auto agencies here are the Ford dealers, Dodge, Buick, Chevrolet, Studebaker, Essex and Hudson, Packard and Buick, Lincoln. Stock men report good sale of mules, and fishermen show a steady market for building materials.

Repair Donaldsonville Road.

Bainbridge, September 2.—(Special.)—Due to the heavy rain and roads in this section are in a bad condition, but road machines are at work and Captain Meeks states that the road will soon be in fair shape if the rains hold up for a few days. Forces are concentrated on the Donaldsonville road which is a part of the Lone Star highway and being much used by traveling public it is getting first attention.

To Start New School.

Bainbridge, September 2.—(Special.)—Facelli will have a big day Thursday, September 6, when the laying of the corner stone of the new $30,000 brick school building of that town will take place with Masons in charge of the ceremonies. Judge Covington of Moultrie and Judge Roscoe Luke of Thomasville, will be the main speakers. The municipal band of Bainbridge will furnish the music and a big barbecue will be served the crowd of visitors that are expected to be present on the occasion. Facelli is one of the oldest settlements in Decatur county and its citizens know how to entertain and especially when it is in the interest of education.

Live Stock Officers.

Bainbridge, September 2.—(Special.)—The Decatur County Live-stock association has elected the following men to office for the ensuing year: H. P. Townsend, president; Ira Bates, vice president; John Roberts, secretary; M. F. Flowers, treasurer, and J. S. Thomas, weigher.

Picrust Table Gives Variety

The greatest asset in furnishing a living room is common sense. The homemaker may have all the money in the world, but if she hasn't common sense enough to buy comfortable chairs, and to place chairs, tables and lights with the proper relation to each other, it avails her nothing.

Did you ever see a beautiful chair in a living room that literally "broke your back" when you tried to rest in it? Did the purchase of that chair show common sense? Or carelessness?

Compare a chair of that brand with the chair in the illustration. The space in this woman's living room is too valuable to devote to unlivable items, and you can well imagine how popular this particular grouping must be.

The chair is the deep armchair that gives an air of dignity and richness to a room, and is comfortable for hours of reading or resting. It is upholstered with brown mohair, and has a silk down cushion of brown and gold. The short legs have the typical Queen Anne period curve with the shell decoration.

A small walnut pie crust table (called a pie crust table because the edges look like the crimped border of mother's apple pie) is used as a side table, and holds a yellow pottery bowl for flowers.

Note the way the cabinet in the corner relieves the wall space. Every room needs high pieces of furniture to give balance to the predominating low pieces, the chairs, tables and davenport.

A few years ago wall spaces were covered with pictures, but the trend today is toward fewer and better pictures, with the wall spaces made less noticeable by the judicious mixture of high secretary desks, cabinets and other interesting pieces of furniture.

per surface generally moulded into a half circle.

The modern Jacobean furniture is lighter in form than the chairs and tables of that time, but the antique table, which is known and loved in every household has come down almost unchanged. With this exception, the furniture requires peculiar surroundings, paneled walls, beamed ceilings and large rooms being the only proper environment.

The next period in furniture design was known as the William and Mary period, beginning in 1689, with the accession of William of Orange and Mary, nephew and daughter of James II, to the English throne. Articles brought from Holland by their attaches resulted in great changes in English furniture. Chairs and tables became lighter and more graceful, for the fashions of the times, especially for men, were nothing short of "foppish"—imagine a man appearing on the street in a wig, with a ruff, a muff hanging from a ribbon about his neck! Naturally those tastes

BEAUTY CHATS

EDNA KENT BROWN

AFTER THE HOLIDAYS.
When you return from your summer holidays, you'll find yourself in need of a good cold cream, a face bleach and a hair tonic. I don't mean to imply that the summer vacation isn't good for the hair, it is; it's wonderful, because it builds up your health and that reacts upon the hair, while hairless days in sun and wind are splendid for hair and scalp.

But sunbathed hair, like a sunburned face, needs oil, so a tonic with olive oil a few days before the shampoo will have the same effect. Dip the finger tips into the oil, and massage the scalp with them, renewing the oil now and then.

The skin will probably be dry after "roasting" the hair. I think this is nonsense, though too much water, salt or otherwise, is certainly very bad. Get the skin into a normal state, water every day for a week or so will do it good, salt water is a splendid thing for the skin. But after this, rinse out the salt with fresh water. Use cold cream liberally for a week or so. If it's sunburned, use a cucumber in it. If you've been sea bathing, you'll find the skin finer grained and clearer, that's the tonic of cold salt water. Make a habit of bathing with salt water, or at least of rinsing the hair in salt water every day, letting the salt dry on. But use cold cream daily with this treatment. Salt is slightly drying.

You'll have a few weeks when the skin is yellow as the sunburn fades, but the face cream will reduce the time quite a lot.

Anxious Reader.—There is always some risk to the health if you use anything to dry up the tissues. Why not dress so the bust is less noticeable? Brassieres, corsets laced so they are quite loose over the waist line, straight lines in frocks—also tend to disguise the fact that the bust is too large.

G. J. R.—When the hair is too thick for convenience or becomingness, the best thing to do is to cut it out in places. Never thin it out as you suggest. It would be well for you to have the clipping done for you the first time, unless you can do it so the clipped places will be evenly distributed over the entire head.

Tomorrow—Useful Formulas.
All inquiries addressed to Miss Forbes in care of the "Beauty Chats" department will be answered in these columns in their turn. This requires considerable time, however, owing to the great number received. So if a person or quicker reply is desired, a stamped and self-addressed envelope must be enclosed with the questions.

What Women Wear

BY ANNE RITTENHOUSE

Dressmakers Go to China For Color Inspiration and Lavishly Use Lacquer, Red, Chinese Blue and a Variety of Greens.

In France red is smart, when and because it is Chinese.

In England the smartness of red is traced to Lady Patricia Ramsey, who is never more admired than when wearing one of her much talked about red gowns. Your English friend will tell you all about it—Lady Louise Mountbatten and the Countess of Brecknock are also devotees to red—a compliment to Lady Patricia Ramsey—and a lot more to the same effect, which doesn't seem to make much difference to an American not suffering from acute Anglo-mania.

Red that resembles Chinese lacquer was conspicuous at the Grand Prix ball in Paris early this summer—the starting point for all the much-talked-about Chinese and Indo-Chinese fashion. And straightway it was taken up with something like enthusiasm by milliners and dressmakers. There was nothing in the least new about this. Fashionable women in France as well as in this country have for several years prized little Chinese dressing tables and lacquered tables of this color. The mirror framed in red Chinese lacquer is almost commonplace.

relected in the furniture.

Solid carved wood gave way to veneering, inlay and marquetry, which were at first used as large floral designs, but later became conventional scrolls. Caneing in the chair backs vied in popularity with elaborate openwork carving which filled the entire frame. Beautiful curved stretchers, often in X-shape, surmounted by a simple finial at the point of intersection, were notched on the tables, and as ceilings became higher, the chairs were made more graceful tapering and octagonal legs made their appearance at the same time, both terminating in the bun, scroll and pear-shaped foot of the Jacobean period.

Porcelain and tea imported from China, necessitated tea tables and china cupboards, and incidentally inspired the "inverted cup" motif which is an outstanding characteristic of the period. Oak remained popular, but so did the furniture of birch and yew were widely used. The upholstery is often of woman's "fancy work" particularly cross stitch, probably due to Queen Mary's interest in her own household, rather than in court functions. The upholstery of the chair seats was drawn over the edge for the first time and fastened with a row of bright-headed nails or line of fringe. Question: The outside of my house is white. Should my window shades be the two-toned variety, with white inside and dark color outside, or a plain gray on both sides?—S. B. T.

Answer: Opaque shades, ivory on both sides.

Question: Which is in best taste, the bedroom to be seen from the dining room, or one that can't be seen?—E. M.

Answer: It is a matter of common sense to have the bedroom cut off from the view from the living room, if at all possible. Copyright, American Homes Bureau.

ATHENS HIGH SCHOOL OPENS TERM TODAY

Athens, Ga., September 2.—(Special.)—Indications point to an enrollment of nearly 700 students at the Athens High school which opens next Monday.

The High school has grown rapidly in the last few years and Principal E. B. Moll is expecting between 600 and 700 students to register for the fall term.

Registration begins next Monday morning and will continue through Tuesday and possibly Wednesday.

On Monday and Tuesday entrance examinations and conditioned examinations will be held. Principal Moll suggests that those who expect to enroll and who attended other schools last year have their certificates with them. It will save delay in the enrollment and assignment to class.

The Athens high school military department is one of the best in the state. Major Hunter Harris, U. S. A., retired, was assigned to the military department last year.

The athletic department is under the direction of Dr. W. W. Brown, who is recognized as one of the best prep school coaches in the state. Girls' athletics are directed by Miss Martha Nicholson, who has many successful seasons to her credit.

RAILROAD OFFICIALS THOMASVILLE VISITORS

Thomasville, Ga., September 2.—(Special.)—The visit of a party of officials of the Atlanta, Birmingham & Atlantic railroad to Thomasville this week was of special interest, as the report was made by them that conditions are rapidly improving in this immediate vicinity and the road is rapidly coming back to its former status.

The party was made up of a number of the city while here and held an interesting conference on general conditions.

The members of the party were Colonel B. L. Buzz, general manager of the road; A. D. Daniel, passenger traffic manager; F. H. Hill, division freight agent; J. H. McKay, superintendent, and George M. Gentry, secretary to Colonel Buzz. Members of the party were entertained at luncheon while here by Mr. and Mrs. Homer Williams.

GEORGIA MAN GIVEN PLACE AT HARVARD

Carrollton, Ga., September 2.—(Special.)—Dr. Lloyd Aycock, formerly of Carrollton, but more recently connected with the research department of Vermont state board of health, has been spending a few days with homefolks here, where he was reared. While here Dr. Aycock received the appointment of associate professor of preventive medicine and hygiene at Harvard Medical school, Boston, Mass. Dr. Aycock left immediately for his home in Burlington to move his family to Boston.

Dr. Aycock is the third son of the late Hon. Joseph A. Aycock, of Carrollton, one of the founders of the University of Georgia. He was representative of Carroll county in the general assembly.

Household Suggestions

Lobster Buying.
To be certain that the lobster you are buying is strictly fresh, see that the tail is curled tightly to the body. Then it is quite fresh.

Tender Cabbage.
Place the cabbage or cauliflower in a bowl of salted cold water for a half hour before cooking and it will be much more tender and delicate when done.

Those Obstinate Feathers.
The best way to remove the feathers from wild ducks is to dip them in boiling water and then wrap in a heavy cloth. The steam will soon loosen the feathers and the "pens" are very little trouble.

Plain Sponge Cake.
When baking plain sponge cake sprinkle a little granulated sugar on the top of the batter just before placing it in the oven. It will form a lovely brown crust, practically take the place of frosting.

A Clean Bathroom.
There is nothing that is quite so damaging to the housekeeper as a poorly kept bathroom. It should be washed away with diluted disinfectant and at least once a week distant should be poured down the pipes. The bathroom is one place where one's work and care show very plainly.

SOCIAL ITEMS
Dr. and Mrs. J. E. Sommerfield have returned to their home in Atlanta after a two weeks visit to points in North Carolina.

WHITE BURGLAR FOUND IN HOME OF GAINES
A youthful white burglar, who was discovered in the home of J. S. Gaines, 210 Jackson street, about 5 o'clock Sunday morning, was being hunted by detectives at a late hour last night.

When Gaines awakened he found the uninvited guest in his bedroom, prowling about the dresser. He had already obtained $5 in money, and made a quick dash through the window when he saw he was discovered. "He was wearing a blue suit of overalls, a brown shirt and a gray cap," Gaines told Policemen H. A. Harts and P. H. Jones, who answered the call.

The Letter of the Contract

By Basil King

Next Week, "In the Onyx Lobby,"
BY CAROLYN WELLS.

Two of a Kind.
In the following autumn Edith was already. She didn't know what else to do. Aunt Emily was rich and kind; but there were limits to hospitality. Besides, it was easy to travel while the children were so young. The lawyer conveyed to Chip her intention of taking them, and returned with the father's consent.

She was not bound to ask for this, but she considered it courteous to do so. If while she did it she chose to take the opportunity to recognize her continued existence by an inquiry or a word—well, then, she said to herself with a sob, it was there for him to make use of.

But he didn't take it. He maintained the silence on which he had fallen back ever since a final peremptory letter from her requesting him not to write to her—she wondered if she had made it more peremptory than she had intended—and so she sailed away without so much as a gift from him to the children.

When the cold weather came she established herself at Cap d'Ail, where the lofty perch of the hotel above Monaco and the Mediterranean seemed to lift her into a world of friendly, flowery peace. She enjoyed this as much as she could enjoy anything.

With a book she hardly looked at in her hand she could sit at her window or on the terrace, soothed incomprehensibly by the blue-green sweep of the immemorial sea beside which so many other dead hearts had watched before her own. She felt herself caught into a fellowship that included not only Hagar and Hecuba, but myriads of unremembered women whose tears alone might have filled this vast inland ocean—drawing a comfort that was not wholly morbid from the reflection that there was an end even to the breaking of hearts.

She would gladly have spent the winter alone with her children and their governess had there not arrived at the hotel a woman she had known for many years and who was in a position oddly similar to her own. At school she had been Gertrude Cottle. In New York she was Mrs. Harry Scadding.

She was now Mrs. G. Cottle Scadding for the purpose of exact identification. She also had "freed herself," she also traveled with two children.

It was impossible for Edith not to meet her and engage in amicable conversation during which the lady talked freely of her "case," discussing the merits and demerits of her "two-act" as though that person had been a kind of partner.

Gertrude was a lively young woman, frank and amusing. Moreover, she knew the people who made up Edith's small world. While the two sets of children played together the two mothers sat on the terrace and talked. It was talk of which Edith was chiefly a listener, but a listener who couldn't deny that she was entertained. She was uncomfortable only when discerning comparisons appeared and with visible joys and smiles rated them as "two of a kind." She began to shrink from Gertrude, the present and the discerning comparisons, she made it a point to be seen with her, championing the sisterhood of loneliness.

CHAPTER XI.
The Frenchman.
Sometimes Edith grew fanciful with regard to the other Americans in the hotel. She imagined that she, or watched her course with misgiving. With a certain family of good, simple people, she would have been glad to establish relations; but she never got beyond an occasional bow or smile, generally over some incident connected with the children.

Of one man she was afraid. She was afraid of him without knowing why, except that he seemed to watch her rather pitily. She resented his pity; she resented his watching her at all. And yet.

If he hadn't been a brave man, evidently occupied with grave affairs, her resentment might have become annoyance. In the circumstances it was resentment modified by a little gratitude. She hardly understood her gratitude unless it was for a hint of solicitude in a world where no one seemed to bother about her any more. He did not bother about her. She grew sure of that.

She had no idea who he was. All she could affirm from distant and somewhat superficial observation was that he was Somebody—Somebody of distinction, position, experience and judgment.

He roused her curiosity even, while the kind of interest in herself which she attributed to him—with what she admitted was the most shadowy of reasons—hurt her pride. It hurt in a manner to make her the more resolute in going her own way.

Not that it was a really reprehensible way. The worst that could be said of it was that it brought her into contacts and promiscuities from which she should have been kept free. Even so no great harm had been done, especially in the case of a woman with her knowledge of the world.

None had been so much as threatened until the arrival on the scene of a young Frenchman, a friend of Mrs. Scadding's. Edith then found it necessary to submit to an introduction with daily, almost hourly, hazards of encounter.

He was a young Frenchman like many hundreds of his kind, who might have been a finished sketch in sepia. Gertrude flirted with him outrageously—there was no other phrase for it. It was the kind of flirting one was obliged to consider innocent, since the alternative would have been too appalling. Edith hoped for the innocent construction, lending an abashed countenance to the situation out of loyalty to the sisterhood of loneliness.

It was a countenance that grew more abashed whenever, in the process of lending it, her eye met that of the man who had constituted himself, she was convinced, her silent guardian.

Fortunately, Mrs. G. Cottle Scadding took herself off to Italy, the young Frenchman disappearing at the same time. It was a new proof to Edith of the depth of need to which she had come down that she missed them. She missed their frivolity and inconsequentiality because they were the only interests she had. She was thrown back, therefore, on her own desolation and on her memories of Chip.

She made the discovery with some alarm that Chip was becoming to her more the center of a group of memories.

She was losing him. That is, she was losing him as an actuality; she was losing his life as swung, ever since then by the perception of her own knowledge of his great treason. She was no more appalled by the loss of Chip.

CHAPTER XII.
Sir Noel Ordway.
It was a perception that deepened when some fortnight after Gertrude's departure, the young Frenchman reappeared.

"He's come back on my account," was Edith's instant reflection. She was indignant that something else stirred in her that was not indignation, and to which she was afraid to give a name.

Perhaps there was no name to give it. As far as she could analyze its elements, they lay in the twin facts of Edith's still young enough to be attractive to men and to find pleasure in her attractiveness.

The young Frenchman reached the point of inviting her to dine with him at the Monte Carlo and look in at the gaming afterward. She declined this invitation gently and without rancor toward him; but it made her think.

She discovered that there was a woman whom a relatively strange man might invite to dine with him alone. She had passed out of the fellowship of Mrs. G. Cottle Scadding. She had laid herself open to hearing those words, spoken ever so respectfully, with a sympathy no American would have approached.

"Madame is so lonely. Madame is too much by herself. Wouldn't it distress Madame to dine tonight, let us say, at Ciro's, or the Hotel de Paris, and look in at the Casino afterward? Madame is always so sad."

The man was too insignificant for her wrath, but not so insignificant that he couldn't be a warning. He was a warning that even if he failed to touch her heart it was by no means certain that another man might not succeed; and not long afterward a man did.

That man Sir Noel Ordway. She had met him almost at once after moving to Cannes. She moved to Cannes practically on the advice of the distinguished stranger.

CHAPTER XIII.
A Liking for Kids.
She met Ordway suddenly at one of the many turnings in the hotel at Cap d'Ail. She had never come abruptly face to face with him before. She knew she colored and betrayed a ridiculous self-consciousness. He was untroubled and sedate.

"Mrs. Chipman Walker, I think," she acknowledged her identity and mentioned his own name.

"I've just been seeing some friends of yours," he went on, "at the moment I've been lunching with the Misses Partridge."

"Oh, they're there? They're friends of my aunt's."

"I, too, have the pleasure of knowing Miss Winfield, which will perhaps excuse my self-introduction. The Misses Partridge asked me to say that they would be glad to see you, if you could ever make it convenient to go over. They wished me to add that they'd come to see you, but that, unfortunately, neither is quite well enough. You'd find them at the Villa Victorine, on the Route de Frejus."

She was murmuring something to the effect that she would go at once, when he said in a tone that struck her as significant:

"It's very pleasant at Cannes—more so than here."

She didn't resent this, perhaps because her need was too great. Besides, there was something about him—it might have been the tenderness of a man who himself knew what suffering was—that put him outside the region of resentments. She only said:

"You'll see that when you go. For one thing, it's further removed from the atmosphere that comes up to us from—down there." He pointed toward Monte Carlo. "In that way it's healthier."

She knew that as she thanked him and passed on she smiled, and that she did so from lightness of heart. Certainly her heart was less heavy. It was less heavy because of his kindness, because of this indication that some one cared what became of her.

She felt so forsaken that almost anybody's kindness would have had the same effect, almost anybody's care for her welfare; and so she came to respond to the appeal of Noel Ordway and went to Cannes.

Between him and her friendship ripened rapidly and unexpectedly. It was so unexpectedly that it took her off her guard. It was beyond all the possibilities her imagination could foresee that he should fall in love with her—a woman who had had her tragic experience, of no great beauty, the mother of two children.

It was, in fact, through the children that he made his approaches, in as far as he made them intentionally. She judged that he didn't do that, that he was caught unawares, like herself. He had merely expressed a "liking for kids," and offered to take the youngsters for an outing in his motor car on the following day. The kids were to go with their governess; when he drove up to the door, and Edith had come out to see them off, it seemed ridiculous that she shouldn't accompany them. Besides, the governess was young and pretty, necessitating an elderly person for purposes of propriety.

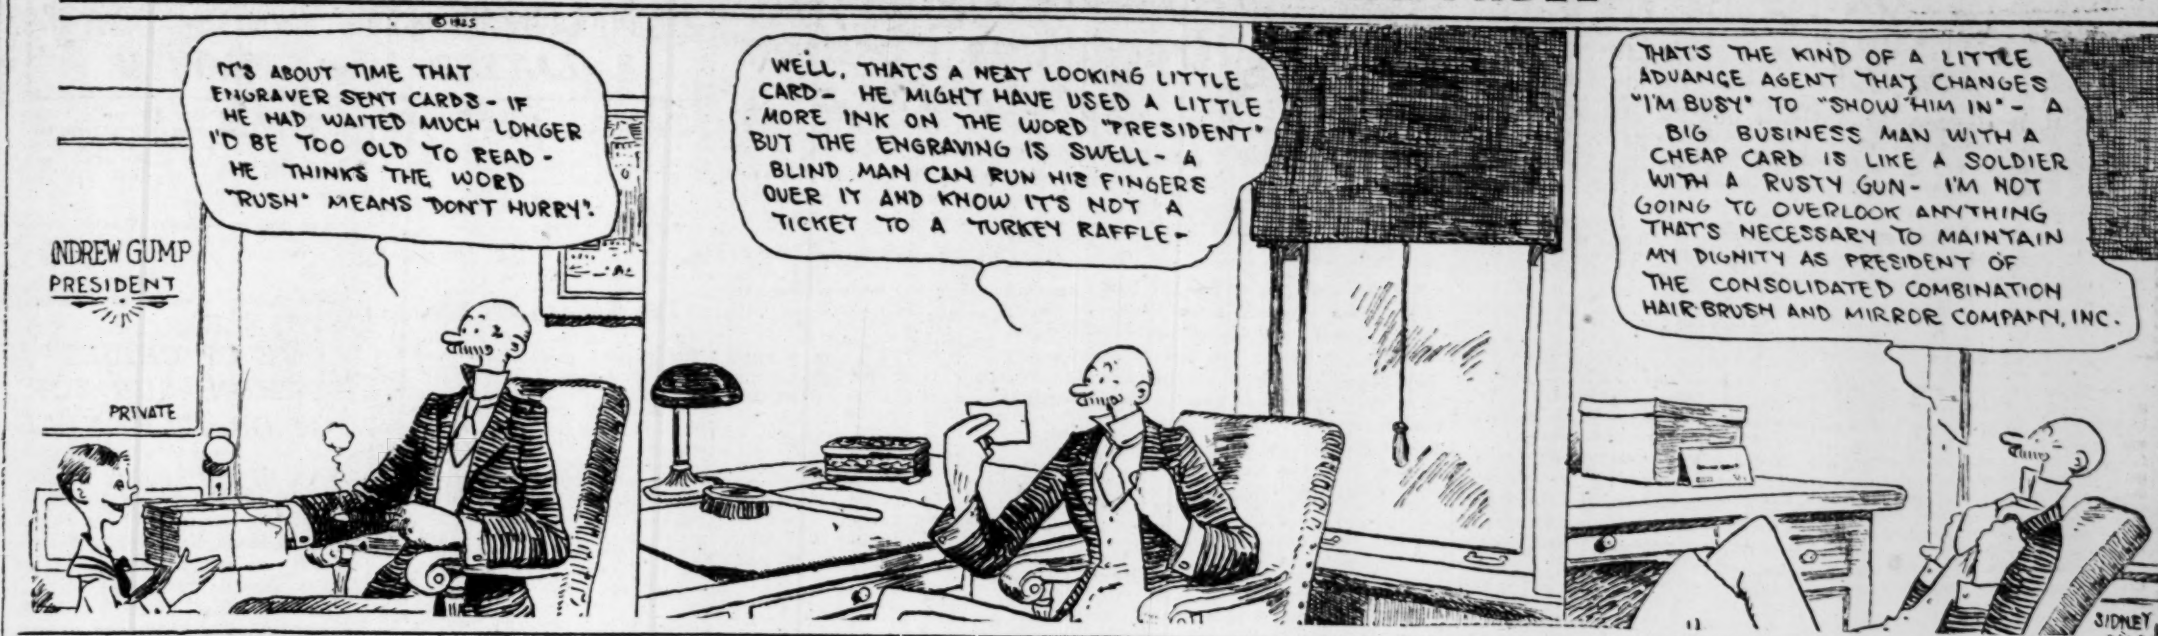

It was, no more, too, in thoughtlessness that Edith yielded to his persuasion and, putting on a thick coat, jumped in with the rest.

CHAPTER XIV.
People in Particular.
Longer excursions came after that—to St. Raphael, to Valence, and as far away as Mentone and the George du Loup. Edith couldn't help liking the young man, first for his kindness to the children, and then for himself.

For himself she liked him because he was so simple, straightforward, and sincere. He grew confidential at time went on, telling her of his home, his mother, his sisters, his duties as squire and lord of the manor, and the bore it was to be kept out of a profession and away from England at the very moment of the hunting.

He formed the habit of dropping in so frequently to tea with her, in the little room at the hotel that she fancied the Misses Partridge, who were friends of Lady Ordway's, began to look uneasy. She wondered if they had given the young man all the information concerning her that was his due.

THE GUMPS—HIS CARDS ON THE TABLE

She made up her mind to ask. Once the fact was recognized it would be a safeguard, in that any possibilities of their being other than friends would be out of the way.

He gave her the opportunity one afternoon in March by asking where she thought of going after she left Cannes.

"I don't know," she said at last. "It's so hard for me to make plans. You see, there's nothing to hinder me from going to Sweden, Switzerland, or Spain; and when that's the case you're indifferent about going anywhere." She waited a few seconds before saying, "You know about me, don't you?"

"Rather," he said, promptly. "I've known that all along."

"He started by saying, with the bluntness that was curiously, but characteristically, at variance with the hesitations of his general manner: 'You could get married again, couldn't you?'"

"Oh, no," she blushed helplessly. "Oh, no," she said.

She struggled to keep to the ground of mere discussion. "I could—legally; but I never should."

"Why?"

"Oh, for a lot of reasons I can't talk about."

"Oh, but I say, you're not serious in thinking you wouldn't, are you?"

"Perfectly serious! I should never look on the matter as admitting discussion."

"Oh, but it does, you know."

"Not for me!"

"Well, it might not for you, and yet might for—other people."

She still forced an unsteady smile. "That's something I don't have to worry about, at any rate. I've given up thinking of other people's opinions."

"I don't mean other people in general—only in particular."

"I only know you—like that."

"I scanned her fingers so as to give him an idea of the entirely transitory nature of their acquaintance."

"That isn't the way I know you, Mrs. Walker, I want you to marry me."

CHAPTER XV.
The Question of the Family.
The statement was so startling that in spite of all her preparatory discussion with herself, she turned on him tragically. "For God's sake, why?"

"Well—because I'm awfully fond of you, you know."

His expression touched her. There was no mistaking the kindness in his eyes, or the look of rather than beseeching in his thin, pinched face. In his golfing suit of tweed he was not an unattractive figure, even if he wasn't handsome.

Again her words had little relation to the things she had thought of beforehand. Her heart was so much with him that she spoke with an emotion she had never shown to him before.

"Even if you are, don't you see, dear friend, that you can't marry me?"

"Oh, but I can, you know."

"If you married a divorced woman, wouldn't your whole position in England be—be different?"

"I shouldn't care anything about that."

"That's not what I'm asking you. I'm asking you if there wouldn't be ways in which it would be hard for you?"

The honesty in his eyes pierced her like a pain. "I shouldn't be thinking about that, you know. I should be thinking about you."

"Well, then, aren't there ways in which it would be hard for me?"

"Not any harder than it is now. It's pretty hard, isn't it?"

The tears sprang into her eyes, but she knew she must control herself. "Yes; but it's in the way of the ill I have. The ill I know not of might be worse."

"Oh, well, they wouldn't be that, you know."

"What about your people?"

"They'd be all right—in time."

The question was like a stab. She spoke proudly. "I'm afraid I couldn't wait for that."

"You wouldn't have to wait for anything. They'd jolly well have to put up with what I decided to do. I've got all the say, you know. I'm the head of the family. And then, you're an American."

"Aren't a divorced Englishwoman and a divorced American in very much the same position?"

Continued Tomorrow.

FRENCH POSITION SWAYED BY RUHR

Paris, September 2.—France's policy toward the Italo-Greek conflict continues to be one of "wait and see," as far as any official intimation from the government is concerned. But the newspapers are busy explaining inside reasons for the government's hesitations. The adjournment of the council of the league of nations until Tuesday is humorously compared by The Journal des Debats to a diplomatic telegram once sent in a similar crisis, reading: "It is urgent to wait."

There is a noticeable lack of enthusiasm over the league as a tribunal to judge Premier Mussolini's action toward Greece, for uneasiness has been frequently expressed during the last 48 hours that it might be utilized by the opponents to the occupation of the Ruhr as a precedent for invoking similar procedure toward France.

Great Britain and Italy, says The Intransigent, are trying to entice France into throwing her influence upon the scales for a settlement of the controversy.

Fear For Precedent.

"It is not," remarked to Great Britain, The Intransigent continues, "that the solidarity she asks of us today she refused us recently in the Ruhr against a common enemy. Also we might ask Rome why her government has shown such reserve toward our policy in the German occupation, and why she mused upon the Moroccan question by sending to Tientsin dozens of gendarmes and a warship that did not go there in our interest. We have, unhappily, some friends who do not see the value of an alliance except when it gives them some claims on us."

M. Bainville, in La Liberté, discussing the real issue at stake, says the importance of the situation has been exaggerated "for reasons that have nothing to do with concern over European peace. The writer declares the thing that might happen would be a maritime conflict between Great Britain and Italy over Corfu, and that the danger of the occupation of the Ruhr as a precedent for invoking similar procedure toward France, and other continental complications is exaggerated."

slight, unless Greece is not urged to resist and no one fans the flame.

One Paper Urges Action.

The Journal des Debats alone urges swift and vigorous action by the league council. If Premier Mussolini refuses to submit to the league, says the newspaper, the council must not hesitate to act, "unless it wishes to bury the league with its own hands and wreck, once for all, the hopes placed in it."

The newspapers commend M. Poincaré's "reserve" in the present crisis, but they are unanimous in their disapproval of alternatives in all directions; there is a feeling that Italy has gone too far, but that France must play her cards carefully and not burn her fingers in trying to pull British, Italian or Greek chestnuts out of the fire.

BODY OF AGED MAN FOUND BY FISHERMAN
Mineral Bluff, Ga., September 2.—(Special.)—The body of Thomas Smith, 85, a Confederate war veteran, was found Saturday near here lodged on a rock in the middle of the Toccoa river. The discovery was made by George Nichols and W. M. Wallace while they were fishing.

An inquest showed that death was the result of drowning and the coroner's jury gave a verdict of voluntary or accidental death. Smith was last seen on the afternoon of August 31, walking in the direction of the river. It is believed that he met death as the result of an accident.

Relatives said that his mind wandered at times and that it was possible that he had been stricken while fishing. His walking cane and coat were found by boys, who were in swimming near the spot where the body was found. He was survived by one brother, several children and grandchildren.

MINISTERS URGES BONDS FOR PARKS

Speaking to the members of his congregation at the Baptist Tabernacle last night for the first time in two months, Rev. John W. Ham, pastor of the church, urged the members to support the $2,000,000 bond issue for Central and other Atlanta parks and playgrounds.

A highly interesting story told by the minister of his recent visit to the east, in which he related, in addition to a number of anecdotes, the splendid parks that have been provided by some of the large cities of the world.

"Have Been Benefited."

"When I saw those wonderful parks and playgrounds," said Mr. Ham, "I was struck by the sight and wisdom of the people who lived more than 40 years ago and who provided these pleasures for the present generation. What a blessing and benediction these playgrounds are to those who live in the congested districts!"

The minister declared that his thoughts immediately turned to his home city, and he said that he wished with all his heart that such great systems of parks could be provided for the people of today to provide parks that the generations coming on may rise up and call them blessed.

Have Moral Value.

"Parks," said Mr. Ham, "are not only valuable as social centers, pleasure grounds and places for healthful sports, but they also have a moral value and their distinctive mental value as well."

"I appeal to the voters to record their vote for this bond issue now, before us in order that money may be provided for the purchase of this park property at this time when it is at its lowest price. Let us vote for the city. Let us vote for the parks, for we need parks, more parks and larger parks. We need more money spent for the recreation of the people, and I urge the voters in this city to give this great moral and civic question their most earnest support."

"Miss Atlanta" for Parks.

"You cannot quote me too emphatically in support of the bond issue that is proposed for Central park," said Miss Thayer, who is the brilliant beauty of Atlanta, who will compete with the handsome women from all parts of the United States at Atlantic City within a short time.

"How I would love to tell the people in the great resort I am shortly to visit that we have in Atlanta one of the most splendid central parks to be found in America, and be able to invite the friends I am sure I shall make to visit my home city and enjoy such a wonderful park."

Miss Thayer, or "Miss Atlanta," as she is officially designated from this time until she returns with the prize from the great Atlantic coast resort, declared herself as hopeful that the park bond issue would go through with a rush, saying that she knows of nothing that would contribute more to the splendor of her home city now than a great recreation center and playground.

"Not only should we have this great centrally located park for the pleasure and happiness of the people living in Atlanta today," said Miss Atlanta, "but we should feel it a responsibility resting upon us to provide now, when land may be secured at reasonable prices, for the health and happiness of those who are to live in Atlanta when it will have become a great congested metropolis."

ADVENTISTS WILL START BIG CAMP MEETING SEPT. 6

From September 6 to 16 the Seventh Day Adventists of Atlanta plan a big camp meeting at Sisson's grove on the Decatur car line. Members of the general conference, the southeastern conference and Georgia conference workers, among them the most prominent speakers of the denomination in the south, will attend the camp meeting and assist in making it one of the landmarks in the religious work of the Adventists in Georgia.

The programs arranged contain discussions on important subjects as well as the status of revealed religion in its relation with the every day affairs of the nation.

Everyone is invited to bring his tent and camp on the ground for the ten-day gathering. Sisson's grove is located across the railroad tracks on Flora avenue on the Decatur car line.

"MISS ATLANTA" STARTS ON QUEST

since her selection in the local tournament. She devoted the day almost exclusively to resting in preparation for her journey, and Sunday night she announced that she was in excellent health and spirits.

"Can Hardly Wait."

"I can hardly wait for the hour of leaving Atlanta," she stated, "and I know my entire trip will be a series of delightful pleasures."

"Miss Atlanta" on Saturday night completed a week's engagement at the Howard theater, where she appeared in person in connection with a moving picture screening of the judging, the contestants and the winners in the contest of the Central and Southern States.

At the theater she wore magnificent gowns of the M. Rich & Bros. Co., which concern presented her with an elaborate sash as a tribute to her charm and beauty.

COLUMBUS AUTOISTS PLAN BRUNSWICK TRIP

Brunswick, September 2.—(Special.)—Thursday morning between twenty-five and thirty prominent Columbus people will arrive in Brunswick in automobiles, coming for the purpose of holding a conference with local commercial organizations with regard to the highway from Columbus to the sea, which has been so strongly advocated for the past several months.

A letter received from the automobile club of Columbus today stated that persons who were about thirty people would make the trip and that they would remain in Brunswick and at St. Simons until Monday.

During the stay in the city the visitors will be entertained in various ways and will be given a boat trip to St. Simons and thence by automobile to Young Island. On next Friday all of the visitors will be guests of the Young Men's club at their weekly luncheon. During the visit a meeting will be held at which various matters in connection with the highway will be taken up, but it has been decided not to select the route nor decide upon a name for the highway at this meeting, but to leave those matters to be settled at a later meeting, to which representatives from all along the proposed route will be invited.

Schools Open Sept. 17.

Brunswick, Ga., September 2.—(Special.)—The public schools of Brunswick will open for the 1923-24 term on Monday, September 17, and there is every indication that the enrollment in the schools will prove the largest in their history. Superintendent Dryden is now getting all preliminary arrangements for the opening completed and shortly will begin the enrollment of new pupils.

There will be completed and ready for use at the opening of the year the new school buildings, to be built on a site near the old school, which has been erected as a memorial to the boys of Brunswick and Glynn county who made the great sacrifice during the world war. The building is being built by the West Point Iron company, and while it will not be entirely completed when the school opens two weeks hence it will be sufficiently equipped to accommodate many pupils. The structure is an unusually handsome one, covering an entire block, and besides the school building, there is a large auditorium, something that has been long needed in Brunswick.

Plan New Highway.

Brunswick, Ga., September 2.—(Special.)—As soon as the 3-cent gasoline tax law becomes effective in Georgia, when a number of small counties in the state will begin to receive with which will be made improvements on their highways, Brunswick and Waycross will co-operate with Brantley county in an effort to build a road through that county, thus connecting Brunswick and Waycross and giving all of southwest Georgia a road into this city.

It is probable that a meeting will be held some time during the present month at Nahunta, the new capital of Brantley county, at which representatives of Glynn, Ware and Brantley and ways and means will be discussed for improving the highway. It has been stated that under the new 3-cent gasoline tax, a portion of which reverts back to the counties, Brantley will have quite a new surplus coming in quarterly, and present plans are to perfect a scheme of an agreement whereby the money can be secured at once and returned when the plan is received. Brunswick and Waycross are vitally interested in the matter and will do everything possible to form some plan whereby a good road through the new county can be built.

Trapshooters Compete.

Brunswick, Ga., September 2.—(Special.)—A large number of Brunswick trap shooters, members of the Brunswick Gun club, will leave Sunday afternoon in cars for Savannah, where they go to participate in a Labor day tournament to be held under the auspices of the Forest City Gun club of Savannah. Among those who will enter the shoot are: J. M. Armstrong, Vassa Cate, M. B. McKinnon, L. J. Levey, S. W. Baker, W. N. Lenn, C. V. Abbott, D. J. Gorenflo, J. A. Clark and probably one or two others.

VAN B. VAUGHN DIES AT PRIVATE HOSPITAL

Van B. Vaughn, 30, of Bolton, died at a private hospital in Atlanta late Sunday afternoon after a brief illness. Mr. Vaughn had been connected with Southern Bell Telephone company for many years. He is survived by one sister, Miss Carrie Vaughn. Funeral services will be held from Collins Memorial church, in Bolton, at 4 o'clock this afternoon. RAINS DAMAGE CROPS
Screven County Cotton Continues to Suffer.

Sylvestre, Ga., September 2.—(Special.)—The continuous rains of the past week have done considerable additional damage to the cotton crop in this county, farmers report. The crop was already very short, but the recent rains have caused the open cotton in the bolls as well as the ground to sprout, and it is believed that much of this will be lost.

It was generally believed three weeks ago that Screven county would make as much cotton as she did last year, which was a little over 13,000 bales. These estimates have been cut considerably, and are growing smaller with every rain. A conservative estimate now is that the crop in this county will do well to reach 10,000 bales, and if the rains continue it will probably be much less.
